A Call to Courage in an Age of Cowards...Cultivating Heroic Students

As we move into the next decade of the 21st century, it is becoming more and more apparent the Kingdom of God needs citizens who are known for one quality over all others: courage. The world in which our students are growing up has become deeply mired in fear. The current crisis has certainly contributed to this but, before it started, we were already battling an unprecedented rise in depression and anxiety among this generation of children and young adults. They live with constant fear of public shaming for doing and saying the wrong things. They parrot views picked up in the virtual public square and are being told how brave they are for supporting the latest justice initiative. They are cowering in the shadows feeling utterly vulnerable to the bullying crowd which can turn on anyone with a level of cruelty and destructive disdain that can ruin opportunities and permanently stain public perception. How do we cultivate authentic courage in this age? What is courage? Why should it be at the foundation of all we do in our schools in the 2020's? This professional day will tackle those questions and help you become more courageous as you equip your students to become the heroes of our time.
